What to consider before becoming a Candidate for Council

While you don't need any special formal qualifications to be a Councillor, having or being open to developing the following skills, knowledge and attributes will definitely help you in your role:

1 The ability to engage with your community. Engaging with the Exmouth community is a vital part of a Councillor's role, and it is important to consult and communicate through meetings, the media, public forums, debates and surveys.

2 Good communication skills. This includes good listening and interpersonal skills, public speaking and the ability to accept alternate points of view, as well as the ability to negotiate, mediate and resolve conflict.

3 Good problem solving and analytical skills. This includes being able to get to the bottom of an issue and to think of different ways to resolve it, including advantages and disadvantages of each scenario.

4 Good teamwork skills. This includes being able to work with others in meetings and on committees and being able to create and sustain functional working relationships with other Councillors, community stakeholders and Shire staff.

Conducting regular citizenship ceremonies and welcoming new Australian citizens to the country.

5 Knowledge or understanding of social justice principles. It is important to make sure that all community members are treated equally, have the right to be heard and are enabled to participate in the public forums and events if they choose to do so.

Attending the Exmouth's special events, such as Australia Day at the Pool, the Birthday Ball in honour of the town's 50year Birthday Celebrations at the Ningaloo Centre or SolFest during the Ningaloo Eclipse.

6 Ethical and accountable behaviour. Shire staff and Councillors are expected to follow a code of conduct that involves, among other things, acting in the best interests of the Exmouth community as a whole. Transparent decision making and accountability, and respect for your fellow councillors, the community and Shire staff are the foundation of good education making.

If you want to make a difference in your community and have a say in local decision making, then becoming a councillor is a great way to do that.

Your role as a Council Member

Generally, Councillors do not have any authority to act or make decisions as individuals. They are members of an elected body that makes decisions on behalf of the community through a formal meeting process.

Councillors represent the Shire's electors and residents. They will work cooperatively to meet the responsibilities of this role from making decisions about policies, infrastructure and public facilities while considering the allocation of and pressure on Shire resources. This guide highlights some of the critical factors relevant to being a Councillor at the Shire of Exmouth. Becoming a Councillor can also be a rewarding role and an opportunity to contribute to the community and influence decisions that affect the community.

ELECTORS & RESIDENTS at the Mandu Mandu Function Centre

Being a Council Member for the Shire of Exmouth is an important decision and a very personal choice. The role can often be time-consuming, demanding and complicated. However, the benefits of seeing ideas and projects you have been involved in come to fruition are very rewarding.

Providing leadership and guidance to the community	Facilitating connections between community and council
Planning for the future	Participate in decision making processes at meetings
Determining and reviewing policy	Managing assets and governing finances

Councillors are also encouraged to engage with members of the community as well as networking with key stakeholders to keep in touch with the needs and views of the community.

THE ACT

The principal Act from which local governments gain power is the Local Government Act 1995 (The Act).

Local governments have the general power to provide for the good governance of the people in their district. This means local governments can make decisions for the good governance of their districts provided the Act or any other written law does not prevent them from doing so.

Local government is the grass roots level of government in Australia. Councillors are ideally placed to monitor the changing needs of local communities, to plan and implement strategies to meet those needs and bring local concerns to the attention of the State and Commonwealth Governments.

A local governments main strength is its closeness to the community and its ability to take account of, and respond to local views and ideas.

Your commitment as a Council Member

You need to consider your own circumstances, whether or not you think you are suited to the role, and if you can make the commitment in time and energy required to fulfil the role.

The overview on the right outlines meetings you may need to dedicate time to as a Council Member for the Shire of Exmouth.

How would your Council schedule look like?

A major requirement of a Councillor is the time commitment required to prepare for and attend Council and Committee meetings, workshops, webinars and other events.
